Our building stocks (over 50,000 building blocks) are ageing. By 2046, there will be 326,000 private housing units aged 70 or above, nearly 300 times of the building stock of the same age in 2015. Whilst green building professionals focus their attention on retro-commissioning and carrying out retrofits in energy-inefficient buildings, the building maintenance of these existing buildings is often neglected resulting in structural fabric decay, drainage suffocation, water seepages, indoor air contamination, health hazard and energy wastage. The webinar will visit some of the common building defects and maintenance challenges which are concerns to building users. Some of these problems may be minimised by green building design, early detection of defects and proper remedial operations. Various survey and diagnostic methodologies are discussed with a view to preventing premature building decay and promoting timely building maintenance.
